True Leadership Training...

SATURDAY

Right Seat Decision Making: The First Due Officer's Role

For officers in the fire service, the basics of leadership are just as important as the basics of our operational responsibilities. The impact we have on our members and crews will meet a determining factor in their success, both now and later in their career.

This class focuses on the basics of company officer leadership and development. From how we prepare ourselves and our future officers to discipline and first due tactics, we have to understand and demonstrate the basics of leadership on a daily basis.

We'll discuss:

- Setting Expectations and Boundaries
- Six Steps for Successful Delegation
- Four Principles for Success
- Five Common Mistakes Officers Make
- First Due Tactics and Command
- Setting Goals and Mission
- Discipline and Handling Difficult members
- ... and much more

SUNDAY

The Basics: No Exceptions Leadership for the Company Officer

The officer in the right seat will determine from the onset the success or not of the incident. "As the first line goes, so goes the call" could not be any truer when considering the decisions made initially by the first due officer. The fate of the call, in many cases, rests on that first due officer and his/her ability to get it right from the beginning.

Whether it's choosing the right line and getting it to the right place, deciding the mode of attack, or determining when victims come before fire attack, the quick and accurate decision making of the first due officer is critical.

Walking through the initial size up to what we look for on the 360 to establishing pre-determined roles, this class will offer real-world examples and techniques that work to make us more effective and efficient on the fire scene, which keeps our members safe and gives our citizens the best chance at survival.
